commissioner Bernard Kerik to Michael Jackson's former associate, Frank Tyson, who was charged with conspiring to cover up for the pop star, and, most recently, New York Post writer Jared Paul Stern in the Page Six scandal. Tacopina first earned his reputation as the "hottest young criminal defense attorney in New York" by winning the unexpected acquittal of Thomas Wiese, one of four police officers accused of torturing Haitian immigrant Abner Louima.

BROAD AREA OF PRACTICE Tacopina's practice is not limited to criminal defense, as he has brought his public relations and litigation talents to the civil arena. Police officer Elizabeth Bryant hired him as her civil rights advocate after fellow officers taunted and threatened her for being a lesbian. Tacopina won a $5 million settlement against the city. In a similar vein, Tacopina recently procured a settlement on behalf of a diamond dealer who accused GIA of upgrading precious gems in exchange for bribes. And, Tacopina presently represents Joran van der Sloot and his father, Paulus, in their New York civil suit involving the disappearance of Natalee Holloway in Aruba, as well as the estate of Imette St. Guillen in its civil suit against those responsible for the murder of the 24-year old criminal justice student.

RESPECTED ANALYST, RECOGNIZED PROFESSIONAL Tacopina is frequently called upon to lend his keen legal analysis to various radio and television outlets, including Court TV, CNN, NBC, ABC, Fox News, CNBC, and MSNBC. He can often be seen during prime time on The O'Reilly Factor, Hannity and Colmes, and Larry King Live. He is also a regular on "Imus in the Morning."

Tacopina has been recognized with honors and is a member of several professional affiliations. He was recently honored by the Italian-American Bar Association as its Man of the Year following previous year's honoree, Supreme Court Justice Anthony Scalia.
